

How far we have come!
When we started just two years ago, Jack was one of only a handful of known cases, but now our foundation has helped locate and network more than 90 patients worldwide and has catalyzed more than $2.5 million of research. Dr. Edward Cooper, who studies the KCNQ2 gene, believes there are likely thousands more children like Jack. The more patients we find, the more data scientists can study, the more research dollars we can attract. And, of course, the more families we can help.

All proceeds go to research and awareness efforts by the foundation to help find a cure for KCNQ2.

Thank you for your support!
